5. Reports from County Committees

a. Rio Arriba County

Judge Martin announced that they have rolled out the RECC digital warrant program. Dr. Dadzie provided an update on ways they are trying to expand access to healthcare access within the county. Efforts include a jail reentry program focused on providing coordinated care for individuals leaving the detention facility. Also will be rolling out a mobile clinic that will provide physical and behavioral health services, as well as dental services for county residents. Also reported on an ongoing program called Reroute, which is a diversion program in which case managers work with law enforcement to provide coordinated care for individuals who interface with the criminal justice system. They are focusing on identifying overdose hot spots, providing Nalox-box access in those areas and also an ongoing post-overdose planning team. Also working on a free transit system for transport to medical services, working on applying for a grant in order to implement that.

b. Los Alamos County

Jessica Strong provided the update. Strong and Judge Allen attended an opioid settlement funds conference in Denver. Looking at programs in Los Alamos County that will be supported by the opioid settlement funding, such as jail-based assessments and their crisis response. Presbyterian is expanding telehealth to detention centers.

c. Santa Fe County

Judge Lidyard provided the update. Peer supported probation is a new program in Judge Lidyard's courtroom. It is standard probation with the assignment of a peer support worker from the LifeLink to help with compliance with probation requirements and the connection with services to bring stability, avoid recidivism, and help help probationers avoid violations that result in reincarceration. The peer support worker either retrieves the probationer from the detention center or makes contact with the probationer at the time of the plea if the probation is not in custody. Housing subcommittee has decided to use the Agape House as a point of contact for people who are experiencing homelessness and have matters in the courts. Considering adding a kiosk for individuals to look themselves up and see if they have open cases or bench warrants. Heard a presentation by the San Diego Homelessness Court and looking at ways some of their approaches could be replicated. Judge Lidyard also noted that there is now a Naloxone vending machine outside of his courtroom.
